

About that name

- Called “virtual synchrony” since in spite of running on an asynchronous network, it gives the appearance of a synchronous network underneath that obeys the same ordering at all processes
- So can this virtually synchronous system be used to implement consensus?
- No! VSync groups susceptible to partitioning
 - E.g., due to inaccurate failure detections